"Kathleen Sullivan would be on anyone's list of the top three or four advocates practicing in the United States today. She has not only built a thriving appellate practice at the firm, but has played a key role in the firm's trial practice, arguing important motions in federal and state courts around the country. Her inclusion in the firm's name reflects the integration of our trial and appellate practices and our strengths as a national law firm with major presences in both the California and New York markets."

Sullivan, a former Harvard Law School professor who led Stanford Law School for five years as its dean, began practicing law in 1982 as an associate of Laurence H. Tribe and has practiced continuously since, arguing appeals in the United States Supreme Court and numerous state high courts and federal courts of appeal. She joined Quinn Emanuel in 2005.

Since that time, Sullivan has won numerous prominent cases. In a recent victory the New York Times called "stunning," she persuaded the New York Court of Appeals to uphold, by a vote of 4-3, Governor David Paterson's power to appoint Richard Ravitch lieutenant governor. This past year she also won an 8-1 victory for Shell Oil in the United States Supreme Court, which held that shipping useful products cannot make a company an "arranger" of waste disposal under the Superfund statute. And she won another landmark victory in the United States Supreme Court when it ruled, 5-4, that states may not bar wineries from shipping to consumers out-of-state. She has represented a wide range of clients, including Nokia, Samsung, Pfizer, Motorola, Coca-Cola, Siebel Systems, Oracle, Intuit, Hearst News, the Alliance of Automobile Manufacturers, Allegheny Energy, PG&E, AIG, and CNA.

"I am thrilled to have been added to the name of this unique and magnificent law firm," Sullivan said. "My colleagues at Quinn Emanuel combine legal brilliance, energy and creativity in a way that consistently produces rare and remarkable results for our clients. I am deeply committed to our firm's litigation practice, and look forward to our continued growth."

Recently named the American Lawyer's IP firm of the year and one of six finalists for the American Lawyer's best business litigation firm of the year, Quinn Emanuel has 400+ lawyers and offices in New York, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Silicon Valley, Chicago, Tokyo, London and Mannheim. The firm reported per-partner profits of $3.1 million for 2009. The New York office of Quinn Emanuel, which opened in 2001 with three lawyers and now numbers 140 lawyers, has contributed significantly to the firm's rapidly growing national and international practice.
